PREFACE

Commissioned by the Philadelphia Chapter of the American Guild of Organists (AGO), the Fred J. Cooper Organ Book celebrates the tenth anniversary of the Fred J. Cooper Memorial Organ in Verizon Hall at the Kimmel Center in Philadelphia. With almost 7000 pipes, this organ is the largest mechanical-action concert hall organ in the United States. Since its installation in 2006 by Dobson Pipe Organ Builders, Philadelphia audiences have heard countless organists presenting all kinds of organ repertoire in both formal and informal concerts, including many performances with the Philadelphia Orchestra. New music seemed to be an appropriate way to mark the first ten years of the Fred J. Cooper Memorial Organ and to usher in its future of continuing to delight audiences. With the backing of the Philadelphia AGO Chapter's Endowment Fund, whose mission in part is to commission new organ music, the chapter's Executive Committee initiated the project. Five Philadelphia area composers were selected to each contribute an accessible brief solo organ work. Each composer was given a general guideline for the style of piece they were to write. The fruits of their labors appear on the following pages, waiting for you to enjoy!

NOTES BY THE COMPOSERS

Fanfare on Gelobt sei Gott

As someone who mostly improvises rather than writes music down, I am fascinated by style studies as well as mixing the sounds of different time periods. Since 2017 marks the anniversary of the Lutheran Reformation, I wanted to compose something Chorale-based. For some reason, Vulpius' Easter tune Gelobt sei Gott kept spinning around in my head. I find that Lutheran Chorales are very conducive to doing just about anything with them. I drew inspiration from the organ works of the 17th century, especially Michael Praetorius, and decided to yank him into the 21st century. Since I was asked to compose a program "opener," I opted for a fanfare that can be a color tour of the reed stops, although I imagine it could work with any registrational combination.

—Matthew Glandorf

Reflection

I was commissioned, along with four other composers, to write a work for the Fred J. Cooper Memorial Organ in Verizon Hall, Kimmel Center, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Although the works were meant to be standalone pieces, we were assigned an order and a description of the types of pieces desired. Overall, the AGO chapter requested music that would serve for as many occasions as possible, not just for the sacred services for which most organ literature is created.

The description assigned to me was "Slow and introspective, perhaps an aria." The title, Perhaps an Aria, tempted me greatly, along the lines of Eisenhower's famous quote to Leonard Bernstein, "I liked that last piece you played; it's got a theme. I like music with a theme, not all them arias and barcarolles." Bernstein then wrote, of course, his Arias and Barcarolles.

Privately, I am always happy when poking fun (and being made fun of in return), but am reticent of such frivolity in public. I suppose I wish never to be misunderstood. So, I settled on the more neutral title, Reflection. I recall that, in early drafts of the piece, literal reflections of the rising melodic intervals of thirds, fourths, and so on appeared, but those did not survive the compositional process. Nevertheless, the title stands, taking its place somewhere between a sacred Meditation and a secular Reverie.

—Kile Smith

Kokopelli: Trickster God

Kokopelli was a fertility god, usually shown in extant artworks as a humpbacked woodwind player, often with feathers or other protrusions coming from his head. He was worshipped by some Native American cultures in the Southwestern United States. Like most fertility gods, Kokopelli symbolically officiated over both childbirth and agriculture. He is also known as a trickster god, and represents the spirit of music, which is why I chose him as the subject of this piece.

Kokopelli: Trickster God was commissioned by the Philadelphia Chapter of the American Guild of Organists in celebration of the 10th anniversary of the Dobson organ in Philadelphia's Kimmel Center. Kokopelli is composed as a concert scherzo for organ solo of moderate difficulty. It uses a number of organ colors associated with organ scherzos of the French Romantic organ tradition in its five minutes of playing time.

—David Schelat

Organum

Organum explores parallelism and triple meter, traits of medieval polyphony, in a contemporary, freely composed idiom. The Latin word organum also refers to a large machine, to a musical instrument, or specifically to our grand musical instrument, the pipe organ. The piece celebrates an especially imposing machine, the Dobson organ in the Kimmel Center, Philadelphia. At moments it mimics other medieval instruments, particularly drums.

Together with four pieces by other composers, Organum was commissioned for the Fred J. Cooper Organ Book, commemorating the tenth anniversary of the Kimmel Center organ in Verizon Hall. It was intended as the fourth piece, one of two lyrical movements. While this composer did not overtly follow one of the suggested options to write a passacaglia, she took inspiration for the focus on triple meter therein.

Philadelphia Flourish

Philadelphia Flourish was inspired in harmonic language and structure by several of my favorite composers—Jeanne Demessieux, Olivier Messiaen, and Francis Poulenc. I was also influenced by Philadelphia's strong tradition of jazz music and its rich harmonies and rhythms. Early on, I decided to approach the work as a series of short variations ending with a toccata, but first I needed a musical theme or two. Having long enjoyed playing works with themes that spelled out a name (e.g. Maurice Duruflé's Prélude et fugue sur le nom ALAIN or Franz Liszt's Präludium und Fuge über den Namen BACH), I tried spelling out "AGO Philadelphia" and "Philly" using musical ciphers created by Olivier Messiaen, Franz Josef Haydn, Maurice Ravel and one known as the clef allemande. Alas, none of these ciphers netted much of thematic interest. I then spelled out "AGO Philadelphia" and "Philly" using a cipher created by composer Arthur Honegger for his work, Hommage à Albert Roussel. Ecstasy! Honegger's cipher yielded two compelling themes. As with many of Olivier Messiaen's works, the piece begins with the playing of those themes.

The word "flourish" is a verb, as in a "city flourishes." Philadelphia could be described in this way. "Flourish" is also a noun—something that is a bold or extravagant gesture or action, made especially to attract the attention of others. Philadelphia and its Chapter of the American Guild of Organists may certainly be called flourishes!
